Caja's transition management approach supports organisations in successfully planning, delivering, and managing transitions. We assist in the transition management of people, processes, technology, and BAU operations, including TUPE, ensuring alignment with strategic goals and new operating models. We ensure stakeholders can confidently adopt and adapt to new ways of working.

The service features include the development of a service transition plan covering technology, data transfer, organisation, and processes, testing of all capabilities prior to 'go-live', readiness assessment for 'go-live', review and alignment of SLAs and KPIs to new service operations, risk assessment and issue management, engagement and communication with all stakeholders, knowledge sharing and transfer, real-time management of transition and 'go-live' issues, consultation services, and programme/project management and assurance.

Clients can expect several benefits from our service, including transition risk management and mitigation, early engagement of all stakeholders, embedding and sustaining change, timely resolution/escalation of issues to minimise impact upon BAU, transparency and clarity for all impacted parties, and managing the delivery of benefits.
