Deployment

Videris is a web application which is deployed as SaaS (Software as a Service).

An up-to-date browser is all that is required to use Videris. The product is designed to be compatible with the latest versions of Chrome, Microsoft Edge and Safari. Standard deployment is included in the subscription licence.

For Long Arm® customers, Videris can be accessed via the Long Arm® Desktop for additional security capabilities.

Data Sources

Videris collects, analyses, and visualises data from over 30 integrated data sources out of the box, including social media, search engines, sanctions, corporate records, dark web data, and more. All are included as part of the Videris Named User licence costs above (subject to fair usage limits where appropriate).

In addition, Videris is able to integrate with additional premium data sources which may be licenced by the customer directly or, where available, through Blackdot as an additional data source. Details available on request.

Videris Product Training

There are two elements to Videris product training: Initial user training and ongoing user training, both of which are included in the subscription licence.

Initial user training covers all key capability of the software and will equip an investigator for normal use.

Ongoing user training is designed to answer more detailed user questions after they have developed familiarity with the product in their own workflow, and to update users on new releases and functionality. Some customers use ongoing user training to focus on expert users, who can act as an internal resource to support new or less experienced users. Ongoing user training is limited to two 2-hour sessions per annum, which is included with the subscription licence. Additional training available on request (£1,200 per 2-hour session)
