Focus Groups

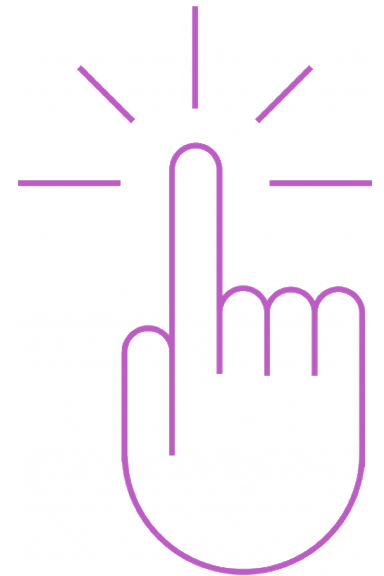

When is it right for you?

Focus Groups are used when you want to gather opinions and ideas about a topic or subject.

Our interactive focus group sessions use creative methods to elicit group discussions and generate ideas that often lead to innovation!

Conducting focus groups with your users and non-users, or even with your stakeholders, is a great research method to gain insight to help shape the direction of your site, app or overall service.

If you want to evaluate whether a website, app or service works, you should consider Usability Testing.

Focus Groups

Features and benefits

Engage with your audience through Focus Groups. At CIVIC, we use a variety of interactive methods in our focus groups to encourage participants to think about questions/topics that are important to your business. Using post-its and custom worksheets, we get to the bottom of what users really think.

Features

- Explore and understand questions or topics important to the business
- Qualitative approach to gaining in-depth understanding
- Enables groups thought and discussion
- Gain insights from users and non-users
- Recruitment of representative users and design the focus group script/activities
- Moderation of sessions, analysis, and reporting of the findings
- Audio, video and photos from the sessions
- Clients can observe the sessions live

Benefits

- Gather feedback from multiple users at once
- Generates group discussion as participants interact with each other
- Clients can observe and be involved in the research
- Clarify potential questions and generate ideas
- Used in early design stage to gauge opinion/gather information
- Stakeholder focus groups to shape internal needs
