"The team is creating role model-like foundations of consulting behaviour, technical excellence as well as stakeholder management! Since we started the project all of them proved a number of times that practising their DevOps values makes us stand out in the infinite ocean of other consultants." - Phil Burls, HMRC CDIO Delivery Lead

Why?

→ DevOps is widely recognized as a critical driver of high-performance software delivery

→ Many organizations struggle with understanding and correctly applying DevOps practices

→ Cultural and organisational change is hard. An expert, third-party assessment can provide the evidence and impetus for change

Discover your current release cadence vs your desired
Guidance on how DevOps practices can help you close the gap

Current testing practices are reviewed and gaps and potential improvements identified to improve the quality and reliability of your code

Areas will be identified where automation can be used to reduce manual effort, resulting in cost savings for the organisation.

The assessment will identify areas where stakeholders' needs, both internal and external, are not being met and we will create an action plan for each area of improvement.

DevOps Assessment – Best Practices

-  An investigation into behaviours, capabilities and outcomes across multiple teams.
-  A measure of alignment with DevOps best practices
-  Objective, but contextual
-  Results in a clear view of capability levels across the people, process and technology aspects of DevOps
-  Starts a conversation about how to make meaningful improvements

Findings

Recommendations

People 1:
Establish a Centralised CI/CD Function for All Teams

it is recommended to establish a centralized CI/CD function that serves as a shared service for all teams. Centralizing CI/CD offers several benefits, including consistency, scalability, and improved collaboration.

Technology 1:
Implement Continuous Security Scanning

It is recommended to implement continuous security scanning as part of your CI/CD pipeline. Continuous security scanning helps identify and mitigate security vulnerabilities early in the software development lifecycle, reducing the risk of potential breaches.
